Don't miss this presentation by Professor Pucher who will share his latest research on cycling and walking. We'll learn:

- What policies and programs are needed to make cycling and walking safe and convenient?
- How do Dutch, Danish and German cities get virtually everyone (incl. women, children and seniors) on bikes for a wide range of trip purposes?
- What can communities in North Carolina do to increase walking and cycling while also making them safer and more convenient for everyday travel to work, school, and shopping?

John Pucher is a professor in the School of Planning and Public Policy at Rutgers University in New Jersey. For over three decades, he has examined differences in travel behavior, and transport systems and policies in Europe, Canada, the USA, and Australia.
